Background information on the event (themes, issues, context).	The Side Event examined, from a Swedish and international perspective, issues showing that land is a fundamental asset for welfare, gender equality and gender space. Women's participation in decision-making and women's perspectives in the planning and construction of housing and sustainable urban development vary greatly between different countries. This is also true of land issues, such the rights of women to own land and the possibilities of involving women in these issues and also an important issue for the future in creating smart and sustainable cities and human settlements.
Concise summary of the event proceedings, including key points discussed	Land is a fundamental asset for welfare and gender equality - for a smart and sustainable urban development. Equal and safe public spaces - planning of public spaces from a gender perspective.
